Hopi Veterans Services launch web cam technology to better serve clients

Eugene Talas, Manager
Hopi Veterans Services

On July 6, 2017, Hopi Veterans Services, in partnership with the Arizona Department of Veterans' Services (ADVS), launched the inaugural Veterans Benefits session using web camera technology. This allows veterans and widows to meet in "real time" with a certified veterans service officer (VSO) to assist with Veterans Administration compensation and pension claims. This new approach will enable local veterans residing on or near the Hopi Reservation to come to the Hopi Veterans Services office in Kykotsmovi, AZ., to apply for VA benefits by meeting with a VSO on a computer screen. The Hopi Tribe is the first to use this new IT method for their veterans.

"It's an innovative way to better serve our veterans. If we can do something to make it easier to access benefits, it means we're doing our job well," Wanda Wright, ADVS Director, says.

Before this program, Hopi veterans had to travel to a veterans benefits office in Prescott or Flagstaff, or veteran benefit counselors had to meet veterans at a temporary office. This way, no one has to travel.

"Our veteran benefit counselors in the Northern Region came up with the idea. Since we use web cameras internally, they questioned if we could use it for our customers. They ran a successful pilot from the Flagstaff ADVS office, and now they're up about 70 successful meetings," Wright adds. "We have a number of elderly veterans in Arizona. 49-percent of our veterans are over 65. To have them not travel two hours to file a claim, means we've created easier access."

David Mosier, ADVS Northern Region Manager, was instrumental in working with HVS to make this a reality.

"The web based program called 'Go To Meeting' was provided to the agency to conduct internal meetings. The Northern Region realized its potential to reach out to the most rural areas of Northern Arizona. Now after successful online appointments with veterans through the Winslow Arizona Indian Health Services, the Hopi Veterans Services and our Flagstaff office, we are ready to promote Web VBC to all areas of Northern Arizona," Mosier says.

The first two sessions were a learning curve for both HVS and ADVS, but the glitches have been resolved. The end results were positive for veterans applying for benefits, and the clarity on the screen was excellent on both ends. Special acknowledgment goes to the Hopi Tribal IT department for providing the technical expertise to upload the necessary software and obtaining the web camera to make this a successful project.

Currently, both HVS and ADVS are reserving one slot per day starting at 8:30 a.m. for the Hopi Tribe. Adding more slots will depend on the volume of future appointment requests. Additionally, HVS staff will be trained to facilitate the sessions, since this is a team effort to allow more opportunities for veterans to be seen. Our hope is to see an increased number of veterans apply for VA benefits to enhance their quality of life and health.

To schedule an ADVS web camera benefits appointment date or to be placed on a roster for upcoming appointments, please call (928) 734-3461 or 734-3462. Once you have a firm appointment date, please bring a copy of your DD 214 form (military discharge document), any award letters, social security card, bank information and/or death certificate (for survivor benefits). Please share this with veterans in your villages, communities and program clientele.

Hopi Tribal Council approves creation of a new Hopi Utility Corporation

Stan Bindell
Hopi Tutuveni

A Hopi Utility Corporation has been formed with the hopes of bringing quality water to First Mesa and Second Mesa since the wells that bring water to those villages have too much arsenic in them.

The Hopi Tribal Council, on the advice of the Water and Energy team, unanimously formed the Hopi Utility Corporation for this reason on June 6.

The order creating the HUC also approved using the board and general management from the Hopi Telecommunications Inc. to operate the HUC.

Carroll Onsaie, general manager of HTI and HUC, said HUC was formed to build, maintain and operate a Hopi water delivery system because the tribe is under orders from the Environmental Protection Agency to mitigate the arsenic levels at First and Second mesas.

Onsaie said there is a little bit of money for the plan and design of the water delivery system.

"That's the goal of the Hopi Tribe," he said.

Onsaie said studies performed years ago showed it would cost about $18 million to building the waterlines to the villages. He said with inflation that those numbers will probably increase. He is hopeful that it will not rise much more than that.

But the tribe doesn't have that much money and those funds from the federal government, Department of Agriculture, have yet to be approved.

Onsaie said the idea is to bring water from wells at the Turquoise Trail to the boundary of the two villages.

"We'll see if the villages want to be the distributors from there," he said.

One line would probably go from the Turquoise Trail to the cultural center and then about three miles to the village's edge. The other line would go from Turquoise Trail to First Mesa, probably cutting across the most direct route.

He said some years back the Hopi Arsenic Mitigation Project received funding for construction of the waterlines to the villages, but the funds sat unused for too long so they went away.

"Our immediate task is to build the system," he said.

In 2013, Onsaie said a charter was approved to review this issue.

Onsaie said the problems with the arsenic have been going on for at least ten years and maybe longer.

"I don't know why this action wasn't taken sooner," he said.

Onsaie said this arsenic issue would probably have been completed sooner if it wasn't on a reservation.

"We have a big task," he said. "HTI is honored to accept this request from the tribe and will put our best foot forward to achieve the goal. We will do our best to provide quality water."

Onsaie said another goal in the future is to look at a Hopi tribal electric system and to create a Hopi utility authority for the Hopi Reservation.

Hopi Tribe welcomes Dr. Ron Reid as new Deputy Executive Director

Hopi Tutuveni

Executive Director Daniel Honahni announced the recent hire of Dr. Ron Reid as the new Deputy Executive Director for the Hopi Tribe.

"Dr. Reid comes to the Hopi Tribe from the Isleta Pueblo in New Mexico, and brings 15 years of experience in the areas of health and education," said Honahni.

The Hopi Tribe welcomes Dr. Reid to his new position. He may be reached at (928) 734-3107 or reid@hopi.nsn.us.

2017 Tuhisma Art Show to start October 7 at the Moencopi Legacy Inn

By: Evelyn Fredericks
Planning Committee Chair

The planning committee for the 2017 Tuhisma art show has sent out applications for this year's event to be held at the Totsvolki Conference Center at the Moencopi Legacy Inn, October 7-8, 2017. The event will showcase the best of Hopi artistry while providing artisans a venue to meet and sell to collectors and aficionados in a spacious, aesthetic setting. On Thursday, October 5, the participating artists can bring their work to the Wellness Center Conference room beginning at 9 am for judging in various categories. A reception will be held from 5-7 pm on the same day.

Hopi cultural art enjoys a stellar reputation worldwide and many visitors to this annual event come from foreign lands. This attraction is remarkable but not surprising. People have appreciated and continued to elevate Hopi art in the marketplace for over 100 years.

The word tuhisa can translated to mean "skillful, ingenious, creative". This recognition by Hopi people is an indication that we have always had exceptional artisans, from the time our ancestors first stepped on this land, and is evidenced by what they left behind. They used the material they had at had to create the things they needed for daily life. Hopi people today continue to create these ancient arts to use in daily living as well as for ceremonies.

As with other indigenous communities around the world, modern culture and cultural appropriation influence change in use of material and methods. Within this context individual artists must adapt while discovering and pushing their own creative abilities. Tuhisma showcases traditional crafts and innovative expressions of these arts. Both styles reflect our culture today.

The Tuhisma art show is part of Pu'tavi Project, Inc., a non-profit entity. This yearly event is organized by volunteers for the benefit of resident Hopi artists. The planning committee raises funds through the sale of t-shirts, posters and booth fees. Monetary donations are accepted as well. There is always a need for volunteers, even a few hours, to help at the event or with fundraising. We meet on the second Wednesday of every month. All are welcome.

Applications can be picked up at Monongya Gallery and White Bear Hopi Arts.

Hopi Tribe Climate Adaptation Travel Support proposal selected for one-time project-based funding

Uberta Mowa,
Hopi Water Resource Program

In a letter to the Hopi Tribe, the Bureau of Indian Affairs Tribal Climate Resilience Program informed the Tribe that they had finished the review and ranking of the FY16 proposal submitted by the May 23, 2016 deadline.

“We are pleased to announce that your proposal for Hopi Tribe Climate Adaptation Travel Support for FY17 has been selected for one-time project-based funding for Category 3: Travel (Climate),” stated Helen Riggs, Deputy Bureau Director Trust Services. “We estimate funding at $16,888. A 638 Awarding Official at the Western Regional Office will determine the actual award amount, based on your proposal and a determination of allowable cost. Actual award may differ from this estimate per decision of the 638 Awarding Official (e.g., unallowable, unawarded, or non-responsive elements of the proposal).”

The Tribal Climate Resilience Program is intended to support tribes as they identify and address climate challenges. To show the effectiveness of the initiative and provide information to meet the BIA’s reporting requirements, the Awarding Official will ask that the 638 awarding document include quarterly reporting.

“We would also like to share what the Tribe learns with other tribes facing similar challenges through the recipient’s Tribal Climate Resilience Fact Sheet,” added Riggs. “These would be publicly available award work products, such as a resulting climate adaptation plan, a related resilience-building story in the Tribal Nations topic of the U.S. Climate Resilience toolkit or other online forums (examples).”

Participation is at the discretion of the Tribe and is not a requirement of the funding. The next contact regarding this award will come from the Regional Awarding Official. If you have questions or comments, please contact Sean J. Hart, BIA Climate Change Coordinator, at (202) 513-0337 or sean.hart@bia.gov.

Native American Science & Engineering Program

Early morning Tuesday, June 13th in Tucson, AZ, Nevaeh Nez (Hopi/Navajo) and Willem Martin (Hopi) were challenged to work with their Native American Science & Engineering Program (NASEP) cohort during a ropes course exercise. The test, to fit all twenty-four student participants on a small 3x3 wooden crate as each new person swings from the starting point to the crate from a rope. With their arms holding on to one another for support, the group was able to achieve their objective. This exercise perfectly encompasses the goals that NASEP aims to achieve. It allows students to gain hands on experience in problem solving, an important tool for those interested in Science Technology Engineering Mathematics (STEM) careers; create a strong network of indigenous scholars that can support one another through their academics; and provide students the self-efficacy to pursue their academic and career goals.

NASEP, organized through the Office of Early Academic Outreach at the University of Arizona, is a year-long program designed to provide Native American high school students with a vision of a career in a STEM field; connects students with academic professionals and industry representatives; and catalyze the student's motivation to complete chemistry, physics, and pre-calculus before graduating high school.

During June 11th-17th, NASEP participants lived in a dormitory at the University of Arizona, and learned more about careers in STEM and the college application process. Using Dr. Shawn Secatero's Well-Being model to guide the program agenda, students participated in activities aimed to satisfy the pillars of spirituality, professional, social, mental, emotional, physical, environmental, and culture. This included an opening prayer from a Tohono O'odham community member, presentations from the College of Optical Sciences, College of Engineering, Raytheon, and IBM, and excursions to the Tohono O'odham and Pascua Yaqui nations. The highlight for many students was building a computer from its essential components, which is a unique opportunity that each NASEP cohort completes.

This year, twenty-four high achieving students from across Arizona and parts of Nevada and New Mexico participated; four identify as Hopi. When Nevaeh, a member of the Badger Clan from the village of Hotevilla, was asked what her favorite experience, she stated that networking with Native American professionals from Raytheon and IBM were the most influential because, "The professionals sharing their stories and how they got to where they are provided me with direction and advice on how to achieve my education and life goals. It also gave me the motivation and courage to take my next steps towards completing them." Nevaeh has already started her higher education toward becoming a Biomedical Engineer by dual enrolling in Coconino Community College while also attending Flagstaff High School. In 2019, she hopes she will have her high school diploma and her associates degree, as she begins school at the University of Arizona or University of Minnesota Duluth.

Willem, whose family is also from Hotevilla, is a rising junior at Tolleson Union High School in Goodyear, AZ. Will has plans to not only obtain his Bachelors of Science in environmental science, but to eventually go to post graduate school and earn a doctorate. Will states, "Ultimately, I want to use my education to help the tribe with various pollution issues concerning water and mines." When asked how NASEP has helped guide him, Will shared, "NASEP has helped me to see that my goals are attainable. It has given me the proper direction I need to see my goals through, and has given me vital connections I need to succeed in my future."

Early Academic Outreach at the University of Arizona provides information and support to K-12th with a focus on underrepresented communities on how to attend college. NASEP has been a program that Early Academic Outreach has offered since 2009. Carol Seanez (Navajo), a University of Arizona alumni in Public Health, participated in the first cohort and is now the coordinator of NASEP. She strongly believes that advocating and providing resources for higher education can improve the health and well-being of communities. Carol attributes her successful navigation through her undergraduate career to NASEP and the support of the Office of Early Academic Outreach.

Carol states that the application for the 2018-2019 cohort will be available January 2018, and encourages all native high school students to apply. Her sentiments were echoed by Willem and Nevaeh, who identified involvement in the community, programs, and clubs as important learning opportunities for college and career goals. Willem provided the advice, "For any high school students looking into Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics fields I highly recommend finding and applying to educational summer programs, such as NASEP. Not only do these programs help educate, but they also create new experiences and friends." Please visit eao.arizona.edu/nasep for more information about the program and application.

Parents: Please check with your school to get exact dates and times of Fall Registration.

Hopi teens make a difference at Casa Grande Ruins National Monument

Submitted by:
Hopi Ancestral Lands Program

On the edges of the Casa Grande Ruins National Monument shade is very rare. There is vegetation everywhere, but the plants tend to be short and wide, and this time of year they are little more than sticks. There are no structures, either, save for walls surrounding the premises that don't really help to protect from the heat.

Yet in the late morning and early afternoon of June 27, on the eastern boundary of the monument, a group of teens was hard at work, doing all they could for a place they had never been before. As volunteers, they had no incentive to brave the heat except for a strong loyalty to their culture and heritage, something they are hoping to spread to their peers.

The seven volunteers, all 16 to 18, are part of the Hopi Tribe's Ancestral Lands program, which is managed by the Southwest Conservation Corps. They are spending their summer traveling to parks in the region that have some affiliation with their tribe. So far they have been to Petrified Forest in northern Arizona and Joshua Tree in California. Their next stop is Glen Canyon in Page.

At every stop, they work with park rangers to complete tasks that are needed to preserve the cultural integrity of these lands.

"We're going to ancestral sites that are connected to us," said crew member Noelle Kooyahoema. "I don't really know that much about our background, how we came to be at all these places, so I thought it was interesting that we could help out the parks to try to conserve it."

During their 10-day session at the Ruins, the teens' job is to clear out vegetation that is threatening some of the cultural resources at the monument, namely the pottery shards that are buried beneath the earth. So they take out some saws, a heavy-duty weed trimmer and other tools and go cutting away. A National Park Service tent provides all the shade they'll get.

But they are not slicing randomly. In fact, they are following science. Katherine Shaum, the monument's archaeological technician, has been at the Ruins for just a year, but she has already studied the entire premises and created a map that shows where the highest concentration of priceless artifacts are buried.

The problem the Hopi crew is trying to solve is protecting these treasure troves from destruction. One threat posed by vegetation is the roots expanding to where the shards are located and thus destroying them. The vegetation also brings animals that dig into the ground by the plants.

"The crew has been great and hard workers despite having to work in the summer heat," Shaum said. "They get to learn about working at a park, and if they want to make this a career they can get an idea about what kind of skills they need and the things they might be able to do."

For the crew, which is in its first year of existence, this is an opportunity to learn and take those lessons back home in order to make a difference. Some talked about finding jobs in conservation that they can then use to improve the Hopi communities, where historic buildings have been allowed to decay over their long history.

"What we've been learning at the national parks is how to preserve the dwellings here," said crew member Dean James. "That leads me to take back what we've learned and use it to preserve what we have on the reservation. Right now, it's kind of falling apart, and nobody is really taking care of it."

They know this isn't a mission that can be solved overnight. What it's going to take is a generational commitment to making sure the Hopi culture is kept intact well into the future. To do that there needs to be a change in mindset among their peers.

"We're hoping to motivate the youth, that there's more to do than just sit around," said crew member Tyrel Kewanwyna "There's a bigger picture out there to be found."

Crew leader Lauren Eustace is not a newcomer to conservation work. She has been a part of other groups like this for years but wanted to start a crew for her peers in the Hopi tribe. Through aggressive recruitment, she hopes to expand to four members in the next year, focusing on different kinds of projects such as hydrology, trail work and geographic information systems. Social media has been the most effective, as the communities on the reservation are spread out, and they have already received 30 applications.

"It makes me really, really happy to see all these young people here with me and experiencing all the things that I've been experiencing," Eustace said. "I'm here to push the limits, for them to push themselves not only physically but emotionally. I'm excited to see what they take out of it, such as getting a job or going to college."

Secretary Zinke Appoints Dr. Gavin Clarkson as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs

For Immediate Release
U.S. Department of the Interior

WASHINGTON – Secretary of the Interior Ryan Zinke appointed Dr. Gavin Clarkson, a citizen of The Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, as the new Deputy Assistant Secretary for Policy and Economic Development – Indian Affairs within the Office of the Assistant Secretary – Indian Affairs, a supervisory position for the Offices of Indian Energy and Economic Development, Indian Gaming, and Self-Governance. Dr. Clarkson assumed the position on June 11, 2017.

“Dr. Gavin Clarkson’s expertise in the areas of law, finance and economic development are a valuable asset to the Department of the Interior and the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs as we work together with tribes to increase economic opportunity and promote self-determination throughout Indian Country,” Secretary Zinke said.

In announcing the appointment, Secretary Zinke also noted that the Financial Times had named Dr. Clarkson the nation’s “leading scholar in tribal finance,” and pointed out that he has been repeatedly cited by the Wall Street Journal, Bloomberg and USA Today on tribal finance and other Indian law matters.

Dr. Clarkson said upon the appointment, “I want to express my deep appreciation to Secretary Zinke for this tremendous opportunity to bring new ideas and methods to Indian Affairs for tribal business and energy development. I am excited to help tribal nations and tribal entrepreneurs create the conditions under which they can build, expand and sustain their economies.”

Dr. Clarkson holds both a bachelor’s degree and an MBA from Rice University. He earned a doctorate in Technology and Operations Management from the Harvard Business School, and is a cum laude graduate of the Harvard Law School. He also holds Series 7, Series 24 and Series 66 Securities licenses from the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority. He was previously awarded a grant from the National Science Foundation to study the dynamics of tribal finance, and his research and congressional testimony on tribal access to capital markets helped lead to the inclusion of $2 billion of Tribal Economic Development Bonds in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act of 2009. He has also consulted and served as an advisor to tribal organizations and federal agencies on tribal finance and economic development issues. Dr. Clarkson is a great supporter of Native students in higher education. He is a lifetime member of the American Indian Science and Engineering Society (AISES) and served as chairman of the AISES Foundation from 2005 to 2009. He has also been a member of the Indian Law Section of the Federal Bar Association, the Licensing Executives Society, the Native American Finance Officers Association, and the State Bar of Texas.

Hopi Jr/Sr High Interim Superintendent speaks on Education Goals

Bertha Parker
HJSHS Public Relations

Hopi Interim Superintendent Alban Naha emphasized successful education requires stakeholder involvement.

“As we review the education needs of our Hopi Junior-Senior High School students, we are looking at data that includes feedback from the community, PAC meeting, and talking with staff and administrators about goals for educational success,” said Naha. “Everything in terms of school success is based on how we have become an integral part of the community.”

“The role we will play in terms of educating students is essential and it is critical that we begin making connections with our Hopi Tribe and have them be a part of the education discussion,” added-Naha.

“They play a very integral part in the various entities that are part of tribal government as well as the tribal resources that are out there. We have made some contacts but we need to strengthen tribal involvement,” said Naha.

“As a community we need to determine what we want our students to be. We need to think long term and the end product,” said Naha.

All of us want our students to receive all the opportunities possible for a good education and to become contributing members of the community he said.

We expect our students to sustain the Hopi base and to be prepared to provide services for the next generations. It is up to all of us to provide them the best education opportunities that assist them in meeting their responsibility said Naha.

That process begins with how students view our school. How they feel about that level of support, and how Hopi Junior-Senior High School is the entity that can provide the tools they need to enjoy the opportunity for success said Naha.

Naha emphasized, “We want to be the school that prepares them for the future. We want to be the entity that is a continuation of who they are and who they become. To accomplish this we need to introduce cultural elements into our structure both physically and spiritually.”

It is essential that students and all our stakeholders feel the school is a sacred place and that we as Hopi’s take the teaching given to us as a sacred responsibility and that we respect those obligations said Naha.

“We want to infuse that level of respect at the school and to ensure all our students are treated with equal respect. We need to incorporate within our curriculum those ideals of what it means to be Hopi. This would be part of what we develop as a set of core values. Discussion should focus on our core values and not the outside settings of the school environment. Everything we do from our curricula and instruction to our discipline and behavior should include the core values of who we are as Hopi,” emphasized Naha.

“The ultimate goal is for our students to become contributing members to the Hopi Tribe. We want to be that bridge that imbues those ideals identified through stakeholder discussions that identify the elements that make up our tribe and who we are as Hopi people,” he added.

“We as a Hopi people need to determine how we are going to approach building those connections at the tribe and community level because community involvement and discussion are an essential part of building that bridge. Education has to be an essential topic for Hopi,” concluded Naha. ###
