Hopi Appellate Court Unanimously Rules in Favor of Mishongnovi Village Board of Directors

The Hopi Tribe

By Marilyn Tewa, Marketing Manager

The Hopi Appellate Court upheld the Village of Mishongnovi’s Board of Directors in an appeal brought by Hopi Councilman Duwahoyeoma. The case, Sekaquaptewa, et al., v. Hopi Tribe, et al. (2012-AP-0002), was brought against the Village of Mishongnovi Board of Directors, and the Court of Appeals decision was unanimous.

The Court of Appeals rejected Mr. Duwahoyeoma’s claim that “complete decolonization” of the Mishongnovi Village Board of Directors violated Hopi sovereignty. The Court of Appeals held that it was “highly ironic” that Mr. Duwahoyeoma, who represents the Tribe’s Office of the Chairman, would argue that Hopi sovereignty “was reduced to that of a petitioning party”. The Court of Appeals also rejected Mr. Duwahoyeoma’s argument that the Kikmongwi Village Court’s ruling in the mishongnovi Village dissolving case, pkomgwit, Wim’momgwit, or Sipaulovi Village dissolution case, should come to the governing authority of Villages.

Hopi Transit Announces New Winslow Route

By Marilyn Tewa, Marketing Manager

Beginning October 6, 2013, the Hopi Tribe’s public transportation system will provide community members with bus service to Winslow.

In 2011, public surveys and meetings with transit staff from resident and non-resident Hopis, conducted by the Hopi Village of Mishongnovi Cultural Preservation Board, resulted in a motion to file a lawsuit against the Hopi Tribe, the Tribal Council, and the transit administrator. The motion was denied by the Tribal Council. The Hopi Transit Board of Directors enacted a new Winslow route. The Tribe’s transportation services now offer service to the Arizona Route 89 border town destinations.

Letter to Editor, RE: Boyden’s Comment on Peabody Coal Lease Negotiations

For years Peabody officials have been denying that they have had legal authority for the Hopi lease, which is critical to proving that they have refined in specific documents that were uncovered in the mid-1990’s by the Hopi Tribe, a distinguished professor of history at Colorado State University that displays the Boyden record on the web.

In 1966 and 1967, Boyden’s law firm filed a law suit on behalf of the Hopi Tribe.

drinking water. We are going to be working with the EPA to make sure that clean-up is done correctly. There are a lot of issues that have to be addressed. I believe that over time it's brought to their attention. I am hopeful that individuals who might be opposed to our trying to make corrections will talk to our people and find out, is this the right way we're moving? In my mind, I think we are. So environmental issues are critical to make sure that we can move forward, we clean our land, keep our ocean clean because all this hinges on the welfare of our people.

Q: What are your thoughts on the Hopi Tribes' financial issues?

A: The financial issues are something that occurred in 2007 and 2008. The financial issues go back years because we've never been able to get a good financial handle on the money we have. What occurred in 2007 and 2008, when we went into turmoil of our finances, especially our investments, they were not being monitored correctly. Because of the investments that the Tribe had, we had to file a lawsuit to try to recover the mismanagement of these funds from the Wachovia branch and the investment brokers that were brought in by a prior Chairman. At the time of this lawsuit, any time you have finances, whenever is the biggest concern is for the people. It's just our responsibility to watch the money that we have. We have completed programs that the Peabody Coal Company for re-rental. We have also received funds from the Peabody Coal Company for re-rental, and for the rental money that we have received close to 21 for the Hopi Partitioned Lands (HPL) and for the rent money that were on hold, which were never followed through. We have received rental money that amounts don't amount to a better correction and negotiation deal in the right-ways to go about the reservation. We believe the strengths that we have, we've done a better job in protecting our gatherings. We have to deal with another tribe to ensure we protect the water right we have. Even though some people didn't understand the Water Rights Negotiations in the long run but our people and the law that is there. We have to run and not lose ground so we can do a better job.

EPA Proposes Carbon Standard for New Power Plants

Environmental Protection Agency

WASHINGTON — The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) proposed a Clean Air Act standards for new power plants in order to combat climate change and improve public health. In addition, the EPA initiated broad-based outreach to engage stakeholders and public in developing the proposal.

The proposal states that the new standards would apply to new power plants with generating capacity of 25 megawatts or more that are constructed after April 26, 2014. The standards would be based on the amount of greenhouse gases emitted per megawatt-hour of electricity generated.

The proposal includes three separate options for emissions limits:

1. A limit of 1,100 pounds of CO2 per megawatt-hour for new small natural gas-fired power plants.
2. A limit of 1,000 pounds of CO2 per megawatt-hour for new coal-fired power plants.
3. A limit of 800 pounds of CO2 per megawatt-hour for new biomass-fired power plants.

The EPA estimates that the proposed standards would result in a 15% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions from new power plants.

The proposal also includes provisions to ensure that the new standards do not impose an undue burden on the electric utility industry. These provisions include allowances for new power plants that are built in areas where the generation of renewable energy is already high, and provisions for states to develop their own plans to meet the new standards.

The proposal is the first in a series of actions that the EPA plans to take to combat climate change. The agency has already proposed a number of regulations to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from existing power plants and other sources.

The proposal is open for public comment until June 26, 2014. The EPA will consider all comments received before finalizing the rule.
